JIM, THE MAN-EATER.

(WRITTEN FOR THE EVENING WORLD.) His sense could last him over night. Why, thanks! I sometimes take a drink. You bet your boots, though, he is bright.

It was not many years ago That Jim and I were up in Maine, Where times were then exceeding slow, And honest work brought little gain.

As meals were scant and far between, And lodgings, too, were somewhat rare. We spread our table on the green

In Summer this was gay erough. And we enjoyed it hugely, too. But then the sport grew rather rough When Winter's lcy bellows blew thought of death, and made my will By which the worms were left sole heirs : And then I lay, resigned and still, And chewed the cud of ancient prayers.

But Jim was huddled up in thought, Evolving some enormous scheme; Until he struck the thing that brought Us back upon good Fortune's stream. Well, this is what he meant to do !

You see, he knew a lot of tricks With cards and beans, and not a few With handkerchiefs and gloves and sticks. so he proposed to give a show ;

And to that end engaged a hall, and then we walked about the town. With show bills pinned on back and breas roclaiming Signor Jim's renown Who, in a week would be their guest

In order to insure a crowd The Signor promised—what a plan! That, if the audience adowed.

The night of the performance came. Jim had nor cards, nor gloves, nor beans; And, what was threatening greatest shame, The Signor's clothes had burst their seams But, nothing daunted, he stood nigh, Whilst I took in the shekels bright,

Until there were enough to buy The things he needed for the night. The house was packed; and all were there

And not a soul appeared to care Loud clamors rose to make an end Of all the presto-changing scenes, And shouts of "Eat" were heard to blend

Straight to the stage, determined, grim; Whose massive frame no terror show Whose boots alone weigh more than Jim !

Awhile the Signor stands aghast In presence of his proffered meal. He bids the healthy glant kneel.

With hocus-pocus long drawn out, Jim plants his grinders in an ear. Well, sir, that fellow gave a shout I think the dead themselves could hear.

Then Jim replies: "The rest is worse." And laughingly the crowd disperse.
